POLICE OBTAIN SEALED SEARCH WARRANT FOR PRINCE'S RESIDENCE

1 Authorities in Minnesota obtained a search warrant in connection with the death of pop star Prince and also won a court order to keep the findings secret, documents showed Thursday. Chief Deputy Jason Kamerud of the Carver County, Minnesota, sheriff's office cited intense media scrutiny surrounding the death of the 57-year-old performer in his request for a state district court judge to seal the warrant. Prince, whose full name was Prince Rogers Nelson, died at his home, a compound known as Paisley Park, in suburban Minneapolis on April 21. Authorities investigating the death found prescription opioid medication on him, according to news outlets CNN, the Minneapolis Star Tribune and others, which cited anonymous law enforcement sources. US MILITARY PUNISHES 16 OVER 2015 AFGHAN HOSPITAL BOMBING

2 The U.S. military will announce Friday that has it taken disciplinary action against 16 service members over a deadly Oct. 3 air strike in Afghanistan that destroyed a hospital run by the international medical charity Medecins Sans Frontieres (Doctors Without Borders), U.S. officials tell Reuters. The disclosure of the nonjudicial punishments will come during the release of the findings of a U.S. military investigation into the incident, which will broadly conclude that the strike was a tragic mistake, the officials said, speaking on condition of anonymity. LAWSUIT AGAINST EX-US HOUSE SPEAKER HASTERT CAN PROCEED: JUDGE

3 A $1.8 million civil lawsuit filed by a victim of former U.S. House Speaker Dennis Hastert, convicted of a financial crime linked to sexual abuse of high school wrestlers decades ago, can proceed, an Illinois judge ruled Thursday. Hastert, 74, once one of the country's most powerful politicians, was sentenced Wednesday to 15 months in federal prison. During the sentencing hearing, Hastert acknowledged sexually abusing boys when he was a teacher and coach in his hometown of Yorkville, Illinois. The victim, identified as James Doe, filed the civil lawsuit in Kendall County Circuit Court in northeastern Illinois, claiming Hastert owes him the unpaid portion of a $3.5 million deal they verbally agreed to in 2008 to compensate him for decades of pain and suffering. Young people might soon find trying to buy smokes in the state a real drag. ISTOCK

State Senate passes 21+ tobacco-sales bill

100 cities, towns bar young people from buying smokes — measure would take restriction statewide.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroSpencer
spencer.buell@metro.us

The Massachusetts Senate on Thursday passed a law that would ban the sale of tobacco to anyone under the age of 21.

The move is the next step toward making the state the second in the nation to enact such a ban. Hawaii was first.

The vote was 33-2, according to the State House News Service. It now needs approval from the House and a signature from Gov. Charlie Baker, who has said he supports the bill in theory but reserved judgment until he can read its language.

Boston's minimum age to purchase tobacco products is 21.

The city's Public Health Commission also outlawed the sale of flavored nicotine-delivery products, including tobacco and vaporized substances, at Boston convenience stores.

Proponents hope the statewide ban will cut back on the number of teenagers who smoke. Studies have shown that youth smoking goes down in communities in which teenagers can't buy cigarettes on their own.

"What this bill is designed to do is reduce tobacco use and nicotine addiction among youth, and in so doing we can improve our health, we can save lives and we can also reduce health-care costs," Winchester Sen. Jason Lewis, co-chairman of the Public Health Committee, told the State House News Service.

The bill has the support of the American Cancer Society's Cancer Action Network and Tobacco Free Massachusetts.

Many municipalities in the state have taken up the cause on their own. Nearly 100 cities and towns, out of 351, have now outlawed under-21 sales.

The Retailers Association of Massachusetts has argued against it, saying it won't cut down on tobacco use but would increase tobacco sales on the black market and send tax revenue across state lines.

The ban would take effect in January 2017 and would exempt smokers who are already 18.

It would also prohibit pharmacies from selling cigarettes. CVS made the headline-grabbing decision to remove tobacco from its shelves in 2014.

And it would ban tobacco vending machines, and the use of electronic cigarettes where tobacco use is already off-limits. It would also require that e-cigarette materials be sold in child-resistant packaging.

"We can improve our health, we can save lives, and we can also reduce health-care costs."
Lewis

Other efforts

Other efforts in the state to curb smoking have been met with opposition. An effort in the town of Westminster to ban all sales of tobacco to anyone regardless of age in 2014 was met with huge protest and drew national attention.

Police: Computer glitch halted restraining order before fatal Lawrence standoff

A Lawrence woman who was shot by her boyfriend had filed a restraining order against him before the shooting, but police said a computer glitch prevented it from being served promptly.

On Tuesday, Antonio Gonzalez allegedly shot his girlfriend, Yenny Santos, starting a standoff with police that ended when Gonzalez killed himself, The Associated Press reported. Santos survived and remained in critical condition after the shooting.

One day earlier, Santos, 36, took out a restraining order against Gonzalez after he had allegedly threatened her life because he believed she had cheated on him, the Boston Herald stated.

The restraining order was granted by a judge at 12:43 p.m. on Monday, and it was faxed to Lawrence police at 1:38 p.m., but authorities said it did not reach an official email account until Tuesday morning, two hours before gunfire at Gonzalez's apartment started the police standoff that ended with his death, the Herald added.

Police Chief James Fitzpatrick said that police had to serve 24 other restraining orders on that same day, the AP reported, adding that police typically serve restraining orders as quickly as possible.

"I wish there was some other way of getting notification," Fitzpatrick was quoted by the Herald, adding that the system had never malfunctioned for hours as it did in this case. "We are looking into what caused the problem."

It's almost official: BYOB is heading to Boston

Boston will soon allow restaurant patrons to bring their own alcohol to some eateries, after the city's licensing board voted to move the process forward on Thursday.

The policy applies only to neighborhoods outside of the buzzing city center and its vibrant food scene.

The BYOB ordinance started in City Council, the latest in a raft of alcohol policies aimed at helping smaller restaurants in neighborhoods like Dorchester and Hyde Park get a boost in competitiveness against swankier eateries in the Back Bay or the North End.

"We're looking to bring some of the vitality of our awesome restaurant scene into every neighborhood in Boston and do it in a way that puts public safety front and center," Councilor Michelle Wu said in December.

Now begins talks about specifics for the city's first-ever "bring your own booze" policy. The three-member licensing board will ponder those questions in the coming weeks and will hold public hearings.

The number of alcohol licenses available in Boston is limited by state legislators, and short supply has made them hot commodities in the city — with some fetching hundreds of thousands in an open market. To address the issue, lawmakers earmarked a big chunk of those licenses that could only be used in those outlying neighborhoods in 2014 as part of an economic development bill.

Boston Mayor Marty Walsh has said he supports the move.

"This is going to help restaurants in the city of Boston," Walsh told Boston Herald Radio in an interview on Wednesday.

Details which still need to be hammered out include how many bottles of beer or wine customers would be allowed to bring with them and sip during their meals, as well as other mandates on safety and insurance.

But Walsh said in the radio interview that "restrictions are going to be tight" and that patrons wouldn't be able to bring big hauls of alcohol into tiny mom-and-pop spots the ordinance targets.

Police seek to ID body found in river

Investigators trying to identify a man's body discovered last month floating in the Charles River have turned to the public for help.

Authorities have described the body as that of a pale-skinned white man who was approximately 60 years old, 5-foot-8 and 200 pounds, Suffolk County DA Daniel Conley reported. He was bald except for white hair on the sides of his head and white facial hair.

The body was discovered floating along the Esplanade near the Hatch Memorial Shell on March 10 around 12:30 p.m., Conley stated. The man had a backpack but no personal papers to establish his identity.

He was wearing a dark Carhartt cap, light-colored pants, a blue sweater and a gray Abercrombie & Fitch hoodie with faded yellow lettering.

An autopsy did not indicate that the body had sustained any violent trauma, Conley added.

Tips can be sent to the Suffolk County State Police Detective Unit at 617-727-8817. JASON NUCKOLLS

Silence earns Catherine Greig 21 more months in prison

Catherine Greig, 65, was arrested alongside Bulger in 2011.

A U.S. federal judge on Thursday sentenced former Boston mob boss James "Whitey" Bulger's girlfriend to spend 21 additional months in prison for refusing to say if anyone helped the couple during their 16 years on the run.

Lawyers for Catherine Greig, 65, had said that punishment was too severe for a woman they described as an animal lover and model prison inmate who was never accused of joining in on Bulger's murder and mayhem.

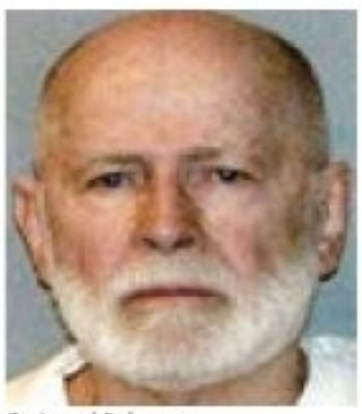
Prosecutors had sought a sentence of three years and one month, while defense attorneys had argued six months would be more fitting.

Greig was arrested alongside Bulger in 2011 when federal agents caught up with the pair in a seaside condo in Santa Monica, California, where they were living with a cache of weapons and cash. Bulger fled Boston in 1995 after a tip from a corrupt FBI agent that arrest was imminent.

Greig was sentenced to eight years in 2012 after pleading guilty to identity fraud and harboring a fugitive. Her sentence on contempt of court charges for refusing to testify will be added onto that time.

U.S. District Judge Dennis Saylor voiced no sympathy for Greig's apparent desire to show loyalty to Bulger.

"It is had to imagine being less worthy an object of love and affection than Bulger," Saylor told the court. "He is a lifelong criminal, not just a criminal but a murderer, not just a murderer but a serial murderer."



Greig and Bulger FBI

Bulger was on the FBI's "Ten Most Wanted" list for most of his time on the run and his story inspired multiple films, including 2015's "Black Mass."

Bulger, now 86, was convicted in 2013 of murdering or ordering the killings of 11 people. His months-long racketeering trial exposed his corrupt relationship with the Boston office of the FBI, which turned a blind eye to Bulger's Irish-American gang as it focused its energy on the Italian-American Mafia. He is currently serving two consecutive life sentences.

Greig's lawyers noted that her initial sentence was longer than the five years Bulger associate Kevin Weeks served for his role as an accessory to five murders.

Bulger claims to have paid agents for tips but provided no information in return. REUTERS

An Opportunity for Volunteers to Turn the Tide of Addiction Towards Hope

A new non-profit organization, a 501(C)(3), is ready to launch its innovative program to assist individuals, their families and the greater community afflicted by addiction. The agency offers multiple supportive elements, such as coaching and mentoring for those in recovery to both enrich their lives and improve success in sobriety. Our community of volunteer coaches and mentors are matched with our recovering participants to provide supportive structure and assist them to develop hobbies, work skills, or even business ventures in their interest area.

We are seeking additional volunteer coaches and mentors. We are currently interviewing for Coaches. As a Coach, you offer to share your time, knowledge of community links and resources to help people in recovery from addiction.

Two-Tears Dinnda by Gerald Carmichael, LICSW

Not just a story, but a call to action!

DJR continues to support its agenda to increase awareness and stamp out the stigma of addiction by promoting its "Two-Tears" symbol of recovery campaign. The symbol is a trademarked pendant featured in Gerald Carmichael's first novel, "Two Tears Dinnda" just released on Amazon. The book is a compelling story interlocking realistic struggles faced by individuals, families and communities dealing with addiction. The evolution of the character relationships is strengthened through their healing and their vulnerability to one another. This is captured by Captain Will's gift to Dinnda, when he creates the, "Two–Tears Symbol of Addiction to Recovery," as a universal sign for healing addiction.

The symbolic "Two Tears" pendant is designed as a gift to be worn by individuals and as a social response by those affected by addiction. Both the book and the symbol can be found on our website at www.DinndasJourneytoRecovery.com. Eighty-five percent of donations go to provide direct services.

JetBlue boosting service to Boston-New York City route

JetBlue Airways Corp will start six round-trip flights per weekday between New York's space-constrained LaGuardia airport and Boston in October, seeking to capture business travelers on the heavily trafficked route, the company said on Thursday.

JetBlue said it would move some of its LaGuardia-Florida flights to nearby Newark Liberty airport to free up take-off slots for the new Boston flights, now that the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration has made it easier for airlines to grow at Newark.

The moves take aim at United Continental Holdings Inc, which has a grip on Newark air service, and more crucially Delta Air Lines Inc and American Airlines Group Inc, which operate hourly flights from LaGuardia to Boston.

Atlanta-based Delta is the largest airline at LaGuardia, scheduling more than 40 percent of its flights including the "shuttle" service to Boston, Washington and Chicago that business travelers like for the airport's proximity to Manhattan, relative to distant Kennedy airport, and for the flights' frequency and amenities.

JetBlue said earlier this week that corporate travel demand is stagnant, although it has gained share of the lucrative market. While the likes of Delta still have long-standing corporate contracts and more LaGuardia flights, JetBlue hopes to attract business and leisure travelers who would have traveled from other airports or by train.

"The FAA's decision to ease slot restrictions at Newark allows us to bring more low-fare, award-winning service to Newark, and clears the way for a long overdue alternative between LaGuardia and Boston for those who have been priced out of air travel and onto the roads and rails by high-fare legacy carriers," JetBlue Chief Executive Officer Robin Hayes said in a news release.

JetBlue said its extra Newark flights to five airports in Florida will begin on Oct. 30, when the FAA's action takes effect. Its LaGuardia-Boston flights will start the following day, with one-way fares beginning at $49 compared to round-trip tickets on Delta and American for $281 or more.

RACE FOR THE WHITE HOUSE

Trump garners two more endorsements in Congress

Of the 300 Republicans in Congress – 246 in the House of Representatives and 54 in the Senate – Trump now had the explicit support of 11.

Republican presidential front-runner Donald Trump on Thursday won endorsements from two more U.S. Congress members as he battled to be his party's nominee.

Trump, a billionaire businessman, U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz of Texas and Ohio Gov. John Kasich were vying for the nomination to represent the Republican Party in the Nov. 8 general election.

"Donald Trump is the only person who has what it takes to shake up the status quo and entrenched bureaucrats in Washington," Miller said in a statement.

Jeff Miller of Florida, who will retire from the Republican-controlled Congress at year's end, capping 16 years in the House, has chaired the House Veterans Affairs Committee.

Bill Shuster of Pennsylvania, also in his 16th year in the House, has chaired a powerful transportation committee.

Trump backers in Congress have argued that many more lawmakers privately expressed support for Trump, but still have to run in primaries and so have publicly remained neutral.

Rep. Kevin Cramer of North Dakota, who endorsed Trump this month, said in an interview that the Trump campaign was cranking up its outreach to Congress.

Bill Shuster GETTY IMAGES

Cruz, a small-government Tea Party favorite, has snared more endorsements from Congress members.

The most prominent Republican lawmakers to publicly endorse Trump was Sen. Jeff Sessions, who has been advising the campaign on foreign policy.

The others were Reps. Chris Collins, Duncan Hunter, Tom Marino, Tom Reed, Scott DesJarlais, Lou Barletta and Renee Ellmers. REUTERS

"Lucifer in the flesh"

Retired U.S. House Speaker John Boehner, a Republican, weighed in on the presidential race during a talk at Stanford University on Wednesday, according to the student newspaper, saying he could vote for his golfing and "texting buddy" Trump but harshly criticizing Cruz.

"Lucifer in the flesh," Boehner said of Cruz, who is a staunch fiscal conservative and who angered many of his colleagues in Congress by leading a government shutdown in 2013.

"I get along with almost everyone, but I have never worked with a more miserable son of a bitch in my life," Boehner said.

Cruz said Boehner was allowing "his inner Trump" to come out.

"What made John Boehner mad is that I led a movement of the people to hold Washington accountable," Cruz told reporters.

UNDER SEIGE!

THE FOREMAN OPINION

With the general election looking ever more like a Trump-Clinton battle royale, I don't know what is happening behind the Democratic parapets — but I can imagine.

It's late. The front door is locked at HRC HQ, but rattles suddenly. "He's at the gate!" the campaign manager shrieks. Staffers leap.

"Quiet down, Mook. That's the FedEx guy." Hillary Clinton stares at poll numbers and thinks about the jitters running through her crew. Like the Republicans, she had written Donald Trump off as a joke. Then he decimated the field. And now he was coming for her. The last thing she needed was for everyone to fall apart. As it was, half the staff was giddy that Trump appeared to be sewing up the nomination, the other half was terrified. She calls out.

"Joel, Amanda, John, Huma — everyone — get in here. Give it to me straight. What are the negatives?"

A functionary clears his throat. "Um — a lot of people really don't like him. He's shifted position numerous times. He has insulted minorities, women and even some voters. He plays fast and loose with facts, and his grasp of policy seems squishy."

"I asked for the negatives. Those all seem like positives for me."

"They should be. But none of it seems to matter. He draws oceans of new voters, and they seem ready to forgive every misstep."

"But I'm a better debater, right?" the contender says.

"In a classic sense, yes."

"And I have more experience in government?"

"Of course."

"And I could be the first female president!"

"Absolutely."

"I've heard enough," she says. "We can take this guy."

The staff disperses, most leaving for the night. The candidate wanders through the dim offices and finds her husband with a clipboard near the storage room. "You think I can beat him, don't you, Bill?"

"No question," he replies.

"So what are you doing?" she asks.

"I'm doing what your supporters ought to be doing. Counting canned goods. Because win or lose, it could be a long siege."

"Mother's Day" is a light ensemble comedy, just like Garry Marshall's other holiday movies ("Valentine's Day," "New Year's Eve"). But at least in the storyline, that stars Kate Hudson, it flirts with something more. The actress, 37, plays a woman whose conservative parents are so red-state she never told them she married an Indian man (Aasif Mandvi) — or that her sister married another woman. Hudson — who worked with Marshall back during 2004's "Raising Helen" — talks about how he touches on issues with a light hand and the pains (and joys) of social media.

First off, I wanted to ask about your half-brother, Wyatt Russell, who's fantastic in "Everybody Wants Some!!"
Yes! He's the best! [Laughs] I'm so proud. But if you grow up with someone, you sort of know. Wyatt was a hockey player, but deep down I always knew he'd act. Even when he said, "Oh, I'll never do that," I knew it was always in him. I remember going to see his little plays [when he was a kid]. He was doing "Oliver Twist" and he was the Artful Dodger. Nobody in our family knew he'd been practicing this Cockney accent. He came out on the stage, he tipped his hat and said, "'Ello, I'm the Artful Dodger." And we were like, "What just happened?!" It was so charming. He has something very special and very natural.

You've worked with Garry Marshall before. It looks like his sets are just fun hang-out spots.
That's Garry's whole thing. He's 81 and he's still making movies. He loves to make movies. He creates a real family experience, which makes for a very laidback, fun time. He wants it to be enjoyable. He doesn't like complications; he doesn't like conflict. He makes a particular kind of movie, and he's not reinventing the wheel. One time he said to me, "It's not always about making people laugh. Sometimes it's just nice to make them smile." He just wants people to be happy, and he's the same way on his sets.

Still, your subplot features some topical business about Texan parents and their fear of interracial couples and same-sex marriage.
When I read it, "Garry's hitting on some issues here, I like it!" [Laughs] But he does it in a very Garry Marshall way. He's touching on very serious issues that need to be addressed. But Garry's thing is all about hope, about optimism. He's hoping people can reach an understanding and have forgiveness on both sides. He makes it about family and what it is to accept and love each other. That's who Garry is.

These days we usually focus on people's bigotries.
It's incredibly rampant. You see it everywhere. I remember posting when same-sex marriage was made legal across the country. It was amazing to see the comments that came up on your feed. It was horrible. It's unbelievable that it still exists. But sometimes I think that's where social media is good, because you see it. It's still there. Don't ever think it's not. It's always a dialogue that should be constantly discussed.

As a nonfamous person I can't imagine what it's like to be a famous person on social media.
[Laughs] I think social media's great. You can just block everybody. The whole "don't block" thing — I'm like, eff that, block 'em. I don't need that. Who does? You're an asshole, you alienate yourself. Bye!

What is up with Julia Roberts' hair in Garry Marshall's "Mother's Day"? RON BATZDORFF

"Mother's Day"

Director: Garry Marshall
Stars: Kate Hudson, Jennifer Aniston

Like Garry Marshall's other ensemble holiday yuk-fests ("Valentine's Day," "New Year's Eve"), "Mother's Day" is the cinematic equivalent of a greeting card with a dumb, inoffensive joke you hastily grab at your local Hallmark. Marshall might even take that as a compliment.

Actually, maybe it isn't quite up to those heights: "Funny" greeting cards tend to have a coherent joke plus attractive, professional designs. "Mother's Day" is visually haphazard and generally slapdash, with a couple heaping helpings of big-name stars slumming through untold failed gags.

Famous faces fill in storylines concerning divorce, adoption and death. They all sound dark, almost Bergman-esque. They're not played that way. Marshall and his four writers treat them like little more than light time-killers.

That even goes for the most topical thread, which finds Kate Hudson as a woman who's never told her red-state parents (Robert Pine and character actress Margo Martindale) that she married a non-American (Aasif Mandvi).

Let's be generous: An otherwise anodyne multiplex number in the tank for interracial and same-sex marriage isn't to be written off. Then again, Marshall directs (if that's the word) his scenes for low-watt gags and awkward cutaways. MATT PRIGGE

"Ratchet & Clank" is based on a beloved video game series, apparently. FOCUS WORLD

"Ratchet & Clank"

Director: Jericca Cleland, Kevin Munroe
Voices of: James Arnold Taylor, David Kaye

If you have no idea what a Ratchet or a Clank is, you might mistake "Ratchet & Clank" for just another off-brand animated romp — a tiny oddity like "Norm of the North" or "The Nut Job" that every now and then mysteriously slips into multiplexes. Instead, it's something much more annoying: a video game movie crossed with an origin story for an established brand. These days even the randos are tied to a bigger corporate hellbeast.

That brand is a long-running series of games, pairing a vaguely tiger-like being (the former) with a tiny robot out of '50s sci-fi (the latter). They zip across the universe, shooting things with big guns.

The movie does slightly more than that. It's a self-aware, joke-heavy piece of whiplash — although not so self-aware that it ever cops to baldly ripping off "Star Wars." To wit: Ratchet (voice of James Arnold Taylor) is a mopey orphan wallowing on a disused desert planet, longing to show the world his secret might. Fate conspires to have him join a squad of do-gooders battling a baddie (Paul Giamatti) who's constructed a massive gizmo that can destroy planets.

There's one novel idea: The main star of the intergalactic superheroes, Captain Qwark (voice of Jim Ward) is such an ego hound that he sells out to the bad guys when he feels underappreciated. Qwark, too, is a knockoff, or at least strongly reminiscent of "Futurama's" Zapp Brannigan, right down to his declarative speaking voice and yen for venality and cowardice. This is a video game you can't play, and not even one of the better installments. It exists solely to birth more gamers, and fails. MP

Keegan-Michael Key and Jordan Peele made an action movie with a cat; what are you doing with your life? STEVE DIETL

"Keanu"

Director: Peter Atencio
Stars: Jordan Peele, Keegan-Michael Key
Rating: R

The first movie by comedy duo Key and Peele isn't too different from the first sketch on their defunct show "Key & Peele." About 30 seconds long, the skit finds two black men — one yuppie, the other gay — pretending to be harder than they are because they think the other is a dangerous thug. "Keanu," by contrast, runs just under 100 minutes, and it mostly offers untold variations on a variation on the same satirical idea.

It's a rich idea, though, and Keegan-Michael Key and Jordan Peele are talented enough to puff it out without padding it out. Kittens help. "Keanu" finds the two trying to retrieve the beyond adorbs black-on-grey tabby that's been absconded with by local gang members (led by Method Man).

This requires subterfuge, in their case ditching their white-ish patois and pretending to be fearsome toughs (from "Allentown") named Tectonic and Shark Tank. What starts out as a feature-length "kitty!" YouTube video turns into a lampoon of both action movies and the 21st century concept of the black male. Key and Peele have touched on this for years, but rarely with guns of kitties. MP

"[The American dream] is a beautiful thing, but it can turn on you very easily. You can work so hard and put blood sweat and tears into something and still never be satisfied."
Sam Harris

Sam Harris of X Ambassadors is also responsible for Rihanna's social-political hit "American Oxygen." GETTY IMAGES

Remembering 'Paul'

The X Ambassadors recall that time they made up a fake tour manager.

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachel.raczka@metro.us

X Ambassadors' stadium anthems ("Jungle," "Renegades") gained them critical fame, but it's the powerfully sorrowful "Unsteady" that has them reigning steady with the top five spots on Billboard's alternative charts. The band's third single from their studio debut, "VHS," released last summer, is a departure from their introductory battle cries, but the emotional song, penned by lead singer Sam Harris, comes from a more personal place.

"It came out of nowhere," he says from a diner in Missouri, where the band had a few hours of downtime en route to their next show. "Alex, our producer, and I talked about what family means to us and my relationship with my parents and their divorce and how uncomfortable it makes me to even think about it."

Harris explains that the single explores his feelings at the age of 15, following his parents' split and his own need for emotional support. However, divorce, he knows, is a common process many families to go through, and "Unsteady" has allowed the band to feel even more connected with their fans.

"I think the great thing about that song is that the chorus itself is what people latch onto, and that's a universal sentiment: admitting that you feel vulnerable and unsteady," he says. And while the song resonates with fans, Harris admits it can be hard to accept the transference of emotions.

"It can be an uncomfortable feeling knowing that your music has had such a hard effect on someone. It's a good comfort because it means something, but there's a weight to it that shouldn't be ignored. It's such a hard thing to fathom because there's no way you can fully empathize with people when they tell you stories and it's hard to do anything other than be graceful and grateful and thankful that this is happening."

On a similar level, Harris is also responsible for penning Rihanna's "American Oxygen," about the struggle of achieving the American dream from an immigrant's perspective. Harris is a third-generation American himself, but he felt the concept was an important one to explore, noting some parallels in the struggle of a newbie musician. "You're constantly at odds with the world around you," he says. "[The American dream] is a beautiful thing, but it can turn on you very easily. You can work so hard and put blood sweat and tears into something and still never be satisfied."

"American Oxygen" with the help of Alex da Kid, who produces both X Ambassadors and Rihanna, took more shape once it was passed into the latter's hands. Rihanna peaked at 34 on the Billboard Mainstream Top 40, while Harris recently released his own version of the song, noting it's even made a few appearances on their setlist during this tour, which will hit cities throughout the U.S. through mid-June before the band heads off to Europe.

The tour supporting "VHS" is a far cry from the bands earlier days, during which, Harris admits he would pose as a tour manager in order to secure gigs.

"We couldn't book a show for anything so I asked my friend, 'How the hell do I do this?' He said to make up a fake manager's name with a fake e-mail address and e-mail venues with very terse, to-the-point e-mails asking for show dates. Before that, I would write these long e-mails explaining that I was the lead singer of this band and how we loved the venue and no one ever replied. So we booked some shows under the fake name, Paul Lewis."

But what happened to Paul Lewis?

"We'd show up to a gig and people would be like 'Where's Paul?' and we'd be like 'Oh, he's sick,'" laughs Harris. "We did that for a while but when finally got our own manager. We fired Paul."

A well-read romantic

Susan Mallery says she wants her heroine-focused romance novels to be an escape.

ALLYSON FLORIDIA
@allysonfloridia
allyson.floridia@metro.us

The New England chapter of the Romance Writers of America — a national nonprofit that aims to advance the professional and social interests of romance writers — is hosting a conference at the Marriott in Burlington on April 29 and 30. Aspiring (and professional) writers will have the chance to dabble in writing workshops and partake in editor and lit agent meet and greets, all in hopes of spreading the word of romance.

Keynote speaker and New York Times best-selling author Susan Mallery chats with us about writing and reading romance. Her newest novel, "Best of My Love," comes out April 26 and she'll be signing copies in the Mariott ballroom with her fellow romance rock stars (Loretta Chase! Megan Frampton!) for the conference's Book Fair for Literacy event on April 30.

You're known for both the depth of your characters and for your humor. Do both come naturally to you?
Yes, I'm very lucky. I've always been wildly sarcastic. Though there was one time, I was in line one day and a lady, she was old and British, she patted me on my arm and said, "I know you think you're funny, but you're not."

I've gotten letters from people saying "Your book gave me time away." I want to be an escape. [Readers] can pick up the book and no matter what, they will have a good time. Whether they're having a great day or a day, I'm a getaway, a safe place.

You're very active on social media. Is interacting with your readers important to you?
I love it. I have readers name things and if I take their suggestion, then I use their last name somewhere in the book. There are Easter eggs in my books. I try to make them as weird as possible, [but] sometimes they're meaningful. One time, a reader's brother who died in service asked for his number to appear. Readers can download the list online and find them in the books.

What is your response to the stigma about reading romance?
Most people who give you "the look" have never read it and are basing it on assumptions. Most women are hardwired to connect; we have a circle of friends. If we don't have a family, we create a family. It's down to DNA. We will take care of other people's children; we will fall in love. And romance novels are for that.

For years and years, we've celebrated the male coming-of-age story and romance is the reaffirmance of the female coming-of-age. That's all it is. They've made assumptions. That's fine; they don't have to love it. The romance genre is arguably the most successful by far — a good romance reader will read 10 novels a month. Contentwise, we dominate. We're the reason some indie authors exist. And I'm happy for that.

GOODELL IS USING HIS POWER IN ALL OF THE WRONG PLACES

Roger Goodell, right, will forever be hated by Patriots fans. GETTY IMAGES

OPINION

@dannypicard

It's all about power. That much we know to be true.

So when a federal appeals court ruled that Tom Brady's four-game Deflategate suspension be reinstated on Monday, you can imagine the smirk on NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell's face.

"We hold that the commissioner properly exercised his broad discretion under the collective bargaining agreement and that his procedural rulings were properly grounded in that agreement and did not deprive Brady of fundamental fairness," ruled the Second U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The key words in its ruling are "collective bargaining agreement." In that CBA, Goodell has the power to do whatever he wants. He can be — and was with Deflategate — the judge, jury, and executioner. It's not right, but it's exactly what the players agreed to.

Now, let me get one thing out of the way. I don't believe Deflategate is over. Will Brady ever serve a suspension? I have no idea. But what I do know is that he's going to continue to fight this. Not being a legal analyst, I can't sit here and tell you just how far he can realistically take that fight, or how long that fight will last. But there's going to be a fight. The unfortunate part is, while Goodell's power is so overwhelmingly corrupt, it's also overwhelmingly legal, as the latest federal court ruling suggests. Throughout Deflategate, this has always been my biggest fear. Judge Richard Berman calmed my nerves when he decided to be the first person to use common sense by vacating Brady's suspension. But two of the three judges that heard the NFL's appeal decided that, as unfair as Goodell's punishment may be, he has the right to dish it out.

The court said, "Even if an arbitrator makes mistakes of fact or law, we may not disturb an award so long as he acted within the bounds of his bargained-for authority."

Like I said, it's not right, but the players are the ones who granted him that authority in the first place. Right now, Goodell is fighting to protect it. Accepting the commissioner's dictatorship is one thing. It's another thing to agree with the way he's prioritizing that power. If Deflategate shows us anything, it's that Goodell is using his authority to fight all the wrong battles. You don't have to look any further than Greg Hardy. Convicted of domestic assault, the defensive end was suspended 10 games last April. Following an appeal three months later, Hardy had his suspension reduced to four games by a neutral arbitrator. Now, you don't need me to tell you that the air pressure in a football doesn't match up with domestic violence. Yet, as of today, if Brady's current suspension stands, he'll be serving the same amount of games as a guy who beat his girlfriend and then threw her on a bed full of guns. Read that last sentence 10 times over.

The most disturbing part about the whole thing is that Goodell seemingly enjoys fighting to protect his power. You can see that with his Deflategate appeal, which resulted in the reinstatement of Brady's four-game suspension on Monday. Goodell has done everything he can to prove he has the right to be judge, jury and executioner. Except for when it should matter the most. The commissioner chose to hear Brady's initial appeal. He then upheld the same suspension he originally dished out. He's been pounding his chest ever since, letting us know it's his right in the CBA to do just that.

Meanwhile, Goodell felt there was no need to do the same with Hardy's appeal, which is clearly the much more serious crime. In fact, let's be honest, it's the only crime we're talking about here. Brady isn't a criminal. Hardy is. Goodell chose to make an example out of the guy who he thinks was "probably generally aware" of the deflation of footballs before the AFC Championship two seasons ago. And as of right now at least, he got his message across: It's all about power. It's just being used in all the wrong places.

PLAYERS YOU MIGHT WANT TO THINK ABOUT TRADING AWAY

Most fantasy baseball experts (present company included) preach patience in April. This is a sound and prudent approach for most situations. However, any experienced owner can tell you that sometimes, early struggles continue well into the season. Each year, there are a handful of well-regarded, established fantasy contributors who simply don't perform up to expectations for a variety of reasons. Today, we'll look at a few of 2016's early disappointments and try to determine who will rebound — and who won't.

Carlos Gomez

A top prospect who didn't break out until his age-27 season, Gomez averaged 22 home runs and 37 stolen bases from 2012-14. Last season, however, he battled myriad injuries and never got going, finishing with just 12 homers and 17 steals. Many owners saw him as an excellent buy-low opportunity, but he hasn't rewarded their faith so far. Gomez has yet to go deep this year and is just 2-for-4 on stolen base attempts. Never an especially patient hitter, Gomez has just two walks against 20 strikeouts through his first 19 games. He's also making weaker contact and hitting more grounders than ever before. SELL

Jose Abreu

KYLE BISHOP

Kyle Bishop is a lead MLB columnist at RotoBaller.com. His articles and Fantasy Baseball Rankings are your secret weapon for winning fantasy leagues.

Abreu established himself immediately after defecting from Cuba, finishing in the top five among first baseman in four of the five standard fantasy categories (all but stolen bases) during his first two years in the majors. The third time hasn't been the charm to this point, however, as Abreu is currently hitting well below the Mendoza line and has only three home runs through 20 games. There haven't really been any drastic changes to his profile or approach, which suggests he's simply suffering from poor luck. Indeed, his .192 BABIP (batting average on balls in play) is lower than all but nine qualified hitters so far, and over 150 points below his career .344 mark coming into the year. BUY/HOLD

Troy Tulowitzki

For most of the past decade, Tulowitzki was the unquestioned No. 1 fantasy option at shortstop when healthy. Therein lay the rub, as he's played more than 130 games just three times in his career. True to form, Tulowitzki missed 34 games last year. But even when he was healthy, the veteran displayed some troubling trends. His walk and strikeout rates both moved in the wrong direction, and he drove the ball with less authority than usual. Scouts noted that his lower-half explosiveness appeared noticeably diminished, and he appeared to struggle catching up to fastballs, a pitch he typically feasted on. Leaving Coors Field after a midseason trade to the Blue Jays may have played a role, but it's possible that all those injuries are finally taking a toll on the 31-year-old. His lackluster start hasn't allayed that concern, and if Tulo isn't raking, the inevitable injury issues make it tough to justify relying on him. SELL

Aries Avoid controversy. You have much to gain by wholeheartedly going after your dreams. Discipline and high energy will lead to success. Focus on yourself and your talents.

Taurus Emotions will surface. Realign your thinking to overcome any uncertainty that someone is creating. Let intuition be your guide when dealing with people asking for a handout.

Gemini An honest approach is best for any deals or situations that put you in a vulnerable position. You don't want to get involved in something that might jeopardize your reputation.

Cancer Use your creative imagination in order to come up with unique, beneficial ideas. The help you offer others will lead to unexpected rewards.

Leo Take the initiative and follow through with your plans. Actions will speak louder than words and help you avoid criticism. Anyone who doesn't like what you do is probably jealous.

Virgo Keep your wits about you when dealing with pushy salespeople. Attend functions that will open your mind to different lifestyles and ways to improve your current situation.

Libra A short vacation or making special plans to spend time with someone you love will boost your morale and encourage you to make subtle improvements to your image and appearance.

Scorpio Try something totally different. It will encourage you to set new standards and make changes to where or how you live. Romance will enhance your life.

Sagittarius Fraternize with like-minded people who could help you achieve your personal goals. A change at home will be comforting and help you alleviate negativity.

Capricorn A couple of alterations to your home will give you the perfect setting to encourage your family to spend more time together. Money will come from an unexpected source.

Aquarius Consider your options and make personal, financial or health-related changes that will make you feel and look your best. Strive for greater freedom to follow your dreams.

Pisces Focus on yourself, not on someone else. You owe it to yourself to live out your dreams and to enjoy opportunities that come your way. Stop putting other people first. EUGENIA LAST
